A DYNAMIC PORTFOLIO DIVERSIFIER

Silver acts as a safe haven during volatile times and can serve as an important diversifier for the portfolio. Silver is often overlooked by investors in favour of gold, and similar to gold, its value usually rises during volatile times or when there is a high level of uncertainty in the markets. As such, gold and silver have low correlation with riskier assets. Silver can be considered a monetary asset, which may be used as a hedge or safe haven against tail risks. However, silver is more broadly used commercially, and for industrial applications, which makes it behave more like a commodity and is more business cycle-sensitive than gold.

In the years following the Great Recession of 2008, global central banks undertook unprecedented monetary policy moves aimed at stimulating domestic growth. As a result, although interest rates are starting to rise in some countries, they remain low by historical standards, which is a driver of global volatility and exposes currencies to significant risks of devaluation and debasement. Silver bullion is one of the leading alternatives as a safe and liquid store of value that offers real purchasing power protection.
